

Because the remediation process is demanding a few regulations have been put in place to assist everyone in fulfilling their individual commitments during the consultations. Please consider the following carefully:

Carers are welcome to stay during consultations and it is usually better that they do as important information and techniques are given and demonstrated to them on a weekly basis. However, it may at times be necessary for the carer to leave the room.

Reasons the carer may be asked to leave the consultation:

- The child's behaviour becomes, in any way, inappropriate. For example, the child may become inattentive or uncooperative on account of the carer's presence. Many children behave in a more controlled manner when parents are absent.
- The carer may become too involved in the consultation. For example, the carer
- may interfere with the interaction of the child and the professional by talking too much, answering on behalf of the child, pressuring the child to provide answers more quickly, physically contact the child, physically crowd the child at the table in a "stand-over" manner or the carer may attempt to team teach with the professional. All of these and such like behaviours undermine the ability of the professional and the child to perform their work and be benefited thereby.
- Additional children and carers are not permitted in the room. Except by permission of the professional only one carer is allowed in the room at any one time. No other children are permitted in the room during the consultation. A nursing mother with a baby is an exception.
- Mobile phones are to be switched off. If it is imperative that they be left on then the adult must leave the room while taking the call.
